Categories : Active Military/Veterans

The following text is provided by the Military Support Program at DMHAS.

Background

Military personnel and their families often experience adjustment issues related to deployment. These problems may occur during the alert, mobilization, and deployment phase, or upon return to civilian life. These military personnel may experience adjustment problems or more serious problems such as a result of combat experiences. At the same time, families are dealing with the stressors with impending or actual deployment.

Program Services

Confidential, transitional services will be offered statewide to currently Connecticut veterans, military service members and their families who are preparing for possible or actual deployment or those military personnel who have recently returned from deployment. The program will offer support and counseling referrals, and will have the following components:

Support services will be available statewide through a provider network of specially trained clinicians when services are unavailable or not covered by insurance through the Department of Defense or Veterans' systems. Connecticut's Reserve military personnel and their family members will be eligible for services.

The counseling services will be managed through an Administrative Service Organization (ASO). Determination of service eligibility, screening for needed clinical or support services, and linkage to appropriate mental health or addiction services will be coordinated through this unit, by Advanced Behavioral Health, toll-free Call Center.

This transitional support model would include informal meetings with military personnel and/or their families who request this service. For instance, this support may involve help on "single parenting" or "the transition home" for troops and their families. These supports might be helpful for Reserve Component military personnel who are not part of formal support groups.

An oversight unit at DMHAS will work with the Administrative Service Organization (ASO) to oversee the triage, referral, and supports for military personnel and their families. This unit will partner with the Connecticut Army-Air National Guard; Army, Navy, Marines Reserve Units in Connecticut; VA Connecticut Healthcare System and the federal Veterans Readjustment and Counseling Service. The MSP staff will work with the service members insurance to identify providers that are Military Culture Informed. If a service member is uninsured the Community Specialist will work with the service member to obtain appropriate counseling through local Community programs:

How does this program meet the needs of the Troops and their families?

- Emotional needs of the military personnel and their families: the pre-deployment, being away at war and coming home are all stressful events for the troops and their families.
- Concerns about confidentiality: troops or their families may be wary of seeking help if they think it will affect their military career. This service information will be kept separate from the VA and military systems.
- Troops and family members may not know what is available or how to navigate the system. The MSP will have linkages with the Connecticut Department of Veteran Affairs and their Office of Advocacy and Assistance to ensure coordination of benefits and necessary services.
- Individuals may feel more comfortable talking with a supportive person in a non-clinical forum as a bridge to obtain services. The MSP “Community Clinician” staff provides problem solving intervention.
- Individuals may need advocacy to obtain their necessary services. The MSP will have relationships with different providers and systems to advocate for the troops and their families.
- The MSP will work directly with Community Clinicians with the Family Readiness Groups (of the National Guard) to give a real person whom they can turn to when they are ready.
- Support services will be available statewide through a provider network of specially trained clinicians when services are unavailable or not covered by insurance through the Department of Defense or Veterans’ systems. These services will include counseling for post-deployment stress issues, family counseling and transitional support.
- The MSP is a transitional service and will operate as the payer of last resort. Whenever there is insurance coverage available, MSP staff will assist the individual to maximize this coverage for their needs. We will endeavor to get individuals and family members help in a timely fashion.
